

Guilt & Victimization

It is very hard to admit to this next truth but there is some indescribable need in humanity to be victimized. There is something in the heart of humanity that does not feel quite worthy.

The thing we find hard to accept in our own behaviour is that we bear and tolerate being told-what-to-do by a whole host of others in our lives – beginning with parents. WE are, each and everyone of us, affected not by the guilt of having done something wrong, but by a natural guilt. This might seem strange to consider, but we all inherit a vague sense of unworthiness. Most of us are affected by these background emotions which arise from our very conditions.

The truth is we put-up-with bad relationships and unfulfilling lives because it compensates our natural guilt.

In guilt one gives with a melting heart and with choking tears because one IS guilty”: One is transcended by the unspeakable majesty and superlative quality of the natural world, as actually symbolised in marriage, against which one feels humbled.

Because marriage relationships provide a very definite, intense, and captive location for undertaking your safe heroism, for redeeming yourself, you have exactly what you need to solve your essential existential and religious problems. There is no other location quite like it for addressing these issues.

In effect your longing for something transcendent, some quality of being able to master the conditions of life, is brought within your sphere of influence – right into your own home.
